Also at Wellesley College, at the National and the Virginia Schools of Methods, Vineyard Summer Institute and at other institutions where she has lectured upon the culture of the body and of the voice, upon all aspects of literary interpretation and upon various educational and ethical subjects. Wherever she has appeared she has won praise as a teacher and a reader.

Boston, Mass., Times: "Mrs. Southwick's art is so finished that it baffles criticism. Her characters, and especially in this true of her Shakespearean interpretations, are presented as she has learned to know them by study and experience, illumined by the gift of a gifted and magnetic elocutionist."

Prof. James L. Hughes, inspector of education, Toronto, Ont.: "No other reader ever captured the teachers of Toronto so completely as Mrs. Southwick. Her attractive presence, her marvelous power in revealing the highest conceptions, and of spiritual insight and her dominant enthusiasm combine to make her an ideal interpreter of a wide range of emotion and thought."

AN INDIAN ORATION.

Occasionally an Indian orator of the old type is found nowadays. He never takes a hopeful view of the future of his country, but invariably expresses sad longings for the days that are gone. The following extract is taken from an Indian oration published recently in the Henryetta Free Lance:

"I know a country where the sun shines all the day long and where there is no wrangling over Indian lands or Indian rights. All is quiet in that sunny land, save the yelp of the coyote, the howl of the wolf, the wailing of the keow, the whistle of the deer and the low growl of the bear. This sunny country is not annoyed with the whistle of the iron horse. There are no bells ringing every third and sixth night calling hypocrites to assemble in that sunny clime. The evergreen pine is the tree about the house, the willow rest under its boughs, fountains of melted snow run down the mountain sides to quench thirst and the thirst of the wild game of this sunny country. Yet it will not do to talk of this heaven of the Red man, because none are allowed to enter the country save the white man. The Black man has asked the privilege of going to his native land, Durkett Africa. They say to him, Nay! Improve thyself within our jurisdiction. And there are eleven, or more, millions of these creatures, and how much fewer are there of us! It might be a great crime to ask this government to let us go to this sunny clime.

"Oh, what a beautiful picture you say that I draw of that sunny country. What is this sublime country called? I remember a time when these men were slaves; a time when the white man owned man, and even the slave was about to be sold away from his owner to a distant country. Are we more timid than the ignorant slave? What man would lose time and money searching and hounding the red man down? This great sunny land that we long for was once ours. Our fathers roamed over these hills and valleys and quenched their thirst in the sparkling streams that found their way to the desert. Our forefathers sleep beneath the shadows of some of these old pines.

"But this was years and years ago, when the oppressors' hand had not been laid on our groves and wooded shrub. This was a time when the red man was free to enjoy himself as it suited him; a time when he sang and danced and did not disturb his neighbor; a time when he bowed into his medicine vessel without being made fun of; a time when he carried out his children and babies and none observed; time when he worshiped the great spirit in his own simple fashion; a time when he danced with joy at the ripening of all fruit giving thanks to Him which ordered such gifts to be delivered to the red man; a time when the red man was innocent of strong laws and one obeyed; a time when the red man was pure and unadulterated; a time when the great North America was his dominion and public domain. Like a little child the red man has been. He knew nothing of his happy states until he was grown up and his happiness has taken wings."

The first grass lodge ever exhibited at an exposition is shown at the World's Fair. It was built by Wichita Indian women and is shaped like a great beehive. The floor diameter is about 25 feet, and the peak where the smoke from the fire escapes is more than 20 feet from the ground. The Wichita Indians are noted for their skill in lodge building.

The natives of the Igroon village on the Philippine reservation at the World's Fair are impatiently awaiting for the big dog feast. It is to dedicate the stone judgment pile or Bontoc court of law. Eight dogs are necessary for the ceremonies.
